

Cerro del Maúllo

For most of the Spanish Civil War, the front between the Republicans and Nationalists ran close to Granada, and so the hills are dotted with the ruins of fortifications and trenches. This short walk takes you through pleasant wooded countryside to a relatively well-preserved Nationalist trench complex, from which there are also great views of the Sierra Nevada. For a longer walk, try combining this route with the Cruz de Víznar loop.

DISCLAIMER: While we have made every effort to ensure that this information is accurate, conditions can change, and you are responsible for your own safety.

1. The start of the walk is clearly marked, just below the visitor centre. Follow the wooden posts with white arrows through the forest for about 1km.

When you meet a dirt road turn right (2) and shortly afterwards turn up right onto a smaller path (3) (both marked with wooden posts).

4. After about 700 m you'll reach the top of the hill and the Nationalist Civil War trenches.

5. Retrace your steps back to point 2, and continue on the dirt road. When you reach the junction with the bigger road, turn left to return to the start point, or right to link with the Cruz de Víznar loop (marked in orange and described in detail in our Cruz de Víznar information sheet).

Getting There

By Car: From Granada, take the A-92 towards Almeria and Guadix. Take exit 253 (for El Fargue, Huétor Santillán and Granada Este). Turn left, following the brown sign for Parque Natural de Sierra de Huétor. Then turn right back across the motorway (also signposted Parque Natural de Sierra de Huétor) and turn right following the sign to Centro de Visitantes. Park in the area below the visitor centre, where there are a number of information panels describing different walks.

By Bus: This walk is not easily accessible by bus.
